Hence, it would be apposite to claim that in order to achieve higher grades in school and make your essay more attention-grabbing, adequate formatting needs to be followed.

However, one of the most fundamental and widely used styles is that of the Chicago manual. The cover page must include the title of the paper at the center (middle) of the page. It must be ensured that the title is written halfway down that page. Next, below the title comes the name of the author/writer, the name of the instructor (if necessary), the title of the course, and the date on which the paper has been written.

While managing your title page, make certain that it is not decorative nor any bold or italic fonts are used; neither any heading is underlined to make it look attractive. While adding the footnotes, the font size must be maintained at 10 pt while writing your endnotes at the end of the document, the writer needs to add the title "Notes" instead of "endnotes" at the top of the final page. The first line of each note needs to be indented and keep in mind never to reuse the number while stating your references in your document.
